CATTLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION
COLONEL CHRISTOPHER L. "KIT" CARTER, FIRST PRESIDENT
List of Persons Registering Brands
by
Barbara Neal Ledbetter
Young County, Texas

Twenty-five years after the first settlers came into what is now Young County, Texas, a writer¹ from Jack County contemporary to the events of the early 1870's wrote in Youth's Companion the following:²

"No wonder then that this country, so vast and unprotected, affording grazing for thousands of cattle belonging to almost as many owners, should attract the attention of thieves, who, with but little knowledge of the country, could soon collect a herd and run it off in a few days either into Mexico or the Indian Territory, where they could easily dispose of it, and the owners would never be the wiser.

The thieving grew to such enormous proportions about the time I speak of, that parties of citizens were continually organizing for the purpose of scouting through the cattle grazing districts and trying to capture the rascals who were rapidly ruining the whole cattle business."

This was the situation of the cattle industry in 1877, the year of the founding of the first cattle raiser's association. Graham, Texas has the distinction of being the birthplace of the organization.³

Cattlemen's organizers⁴ - Three men have been given credit for their conversations about such an organization among cattlemen of the 19th century. Col. C.C. (Lum) Slaughter, Mr. J. C. Loving and Col. Christopher L. "Kit" Carter. Their idea spawned the nucleus of what is now called the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raiser's Association. Advertising was placed in several north Texas newspapers⁵ inviting cowmen to meet in Graham for the purpose of organizing. The senior member of the trio, Colonel "Kit" Carter, served as the first president of the organization.

Like the name of Carter, the other two cattlemen's names are synonymous with the cattle industry today. Col. C.C. Slaughter was the son of Rev. G. W. Slaughter, a Palo Pinto County Baptist Minister, a friend of Sam Houston, a soldier of Alamo fame, and later a cattleman of north Texas.⁶

1. The writer was known by W.W.W. see page 307 Five Years a Cavalryman, by H. H. McConnell, printed 1888.

The Loving name will be remembered most for its attachment to the Goodnight-Loving Cattle Trail fame. Oliver Loving, Sr. had been dead some ten years when the Cattlemen organized, but his son was to be one of its prime organizers. Loving Valley, Loving, Texas and the Goodnight-Loving Cattle Trail all bear the Loving name.

Over 300 men came to Graham to organize for their mutual protection. J.N.Simpson of Dallas, who later became well known in banking circles, state politics, and national railroads, was the temporary officer for the first meeting on February 15, 1877. Colonel Carter was elected the first President and 17 men were appointed to write the by-laws and constitution of the organization. They were:⁸

James C. Loving	George Wright	Joseph Graham
Samuel Glasgow	John D. Smith	Thomas Merrill
H. G. Bedford	D. B. Gardner	R. F. Mabry
Webb B. Slaughter	J. R. Lindsey	C. L. Carter

The whole of north Texas was divided into 6 districts.⁹ Stockraisers living within the confines of these districts were assigned duties whereby they would help find, round-up, and notify owners of stray cattle. From the beginning situation as described by the Jack County writer, these cattlemen had an uphill battle to protect their industry.

The organization met again during the summer of 1877, with Colonel C. L. "Kit" Carter presiding. It was possible at this meeting that the cowmen gathered beneath the leafy bows of the old oak tree to discuss their progress and future plans.

The evolving of the association's name tells a story in expansion. It grew from "Northwest Texas Cattle Raisers Association" in 1877 to "Texas Cattle Raisers Association" in 1893 to the present "Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association," adopted in 1921 (when the Panhandle and Southwest Association joined forces with the Texas group.)

Standing in the plaza and north of the new Graham Federal Savings and Loan Association building at 408 Fourth Street is the historic tree and a marker which reads:

COMMEMORATING THE ORGANIZATION OF THE
TEXAS AND SOUTHWESTERN CATTLE RAISERS ASSOCIATION

Under this oak tree on February 15, 16, and 17, 1877

Officers elected:

C. L. Carter, president
J. D. Smith, vice-president
J. C. Loving, secretary
S. J. Conner, assistant secretary

The marker was erected by the executive committee of the association at their meeting in Graham on June 12, 1930.⁹

The Graham Federal and Savings and Loan Association which now stands on this site provides deserving dignity for this historic tree and marker. The descendants of these early pioneer builders of this community are certainly proud to have the site commemorated and preserved by this public spirited business company.

Many good and faithful cattlemen have served the organization. J. B. "Blue" Terrell was one of the first inspectors. Past presidents of the organization have been:¹⁰

Of the triumvirate of cattlemen who are credited with the beginning of the cattlemen's organization, least has been written about Colonel "Kit" Carter. Perhaps it is because he was the senior member of the group and died a few years after the organization of the Cattlemen's Association.

Carter was one of the first white men to settle in Palo Pinto County.¹ County records record his: "homestead composing of 200 acres with improvements situated on the line of Palo Pinto County and Young County, Texas, south of the Brazos River." Colonel "Kit" Carter soon married Ann Ross. The Carter family was reared in Palo Pinto County and their family history is interwoven with the historical events of that county.

The Carters were frequent visitors to the Brazos Agency Indian Reservation³ in Young county where Capt. Shapely Prince Ross was a supervisor. On one occasion schoolteacher Coombes made notice of his visitors on the reservation. In 1859 he wrote:⁴

"Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Carter and family are here on a visit and are very pleasant people of course as their good sense and raising gave a sufficient guarantee of the same."

Again he noted in February, 1859 that Mrs. Carter had visited his classroom of Indian and white children in order to hear "them recite." Many times during the Brazos Agency Reservation War, Colonel "Kit" visited the agency. At times he came with his family; other times he came with B. F. Dillingham, Charles Dalton, and John Geiger, stockraisers.⁵

At the time the cattlemen organized in the town of Graham, Colonel Carter owned a company, incorporated under the laws of Texas. The KIT CARTER CATTLE COMPANY was valued at $246,400.15.⁶ During his life he transacted business deals with such men as George Kisinger, William Ramsey, P. W. Wright, Loving and Goodnight, J. H. Williams, J. M. Hayes, C. H. Hamilton, W. H. Suden, Sam H. Milliken, M.O. Lynn, Dr. and Mrs. C. B. Raines, William Metcalf, Joel McKee, J. A. McLaren, C. C. Parrack, William Veale, J. C. Hoffman, S. P. Ross, McKiney and Williams, G. W. Adams, M. S. Gordon, Joel McKee and James C. Son.⁷

He bought 35 acres of Young county land from Capt. Shapley Ross for $70.00,⁸ a premium price for land at this time. He also did extensive business with James C. Son⁹, founder and longtime publisher of THE PALO PINTO STAR, founded in June, 1876.¹⁰

Colonel Carter's business enterprises were financed by the Texas Land and Mortgage Company, Limited. Lawyers for the CARTER CATTLE COMPANY were Watts, Aldridge, and Eckford.¹¹

Although Charles Goodnight knew Colonel Carter intimately and had business associations with him, for some unknown reason Carter was never mentioned in Goodnight's memoirs. The biography of Charles Goodnight, written by J. Evetts Haley in 1936 has been acclaimed by the great biographer Frazier Hunt as the "greatest frontier biography ever written."¹² None of these records mention Carter, which is most unusual since Goodnight mentioned many others whom he knew during his early years in Palo Pinto, Jack, and Young counties.

There are, however, many other records of the Carter family's influence. Carter Bend on the Brazos River is named for Col. Carter, and the name of "Shaff" Carter, the Col's son, is on a monument on private land east of Olney at the site of an Indian battle.

This battle, in which Mr. and Mrs. "Kit" Carter lost their son, was called the Little Salt Creek Battle of 1869. Most Young countians are familiar with the details of this battle. Shapely P. Carter (nicknamed "Shaff") died as a result of wounds suffered in the battle.

W. C. "Billy" Kutch, the last person to survive, left his written memoirs of the battle. His account states:¹³

✓ "We spied a good sized bunch of Indians a little way off and Shaff Carter and I started toward them."

"Shaff Carter was wounded twice."

"During this battle we lost 200 cattle, 31 horses, a pack of mules, all our bedding, our provisions, and all our ammunition."

✓ The original monument, placed on land east of Olney by a 19th century historian, Dr. W. M. Terrell, gives the names of the men in this battle, among which is the name of "Shaff" Carter.¹⁴

Colonel Carter died at his ranch home near the Brazos River on July 15, 1888.¹⁵ He died intestate and his wife was appointed on October 17, 1888 by the court to administer the estate.¹⁶

The affluence in which the Carters lived can be ascertained by details as they appear in Judge M. L. Garrett's Court.

"Estate consists of family library, household furniture, family portraits, buggies, saddles, harnesses, work horses, stock, land, homestead south of the Brazos, and the Kit Carter Cattle Company."¹⁷

Colonel "Kit" Carter was buried at the old ranch house in Young-Palo Pinto County. For more than seventy years, the family burial grounds lay undisturbed. When Possum Kingdom Dam was built and it was evident that waters from the Brazos would soon inundate the burial plot, descendants of the family, in 1940, removed the bodies of Colonel Christopher L. "Kit" Carter; his wife, Ann Ross Carter; his daughter, Betty M. Carter; and son, S. P. "Shaff" Carter from the Carter ranch to reburial in Riverside Cemetery, Wichita Falls, Texas.²¹

INDEX TO NAMES OF PERSONS REGISTERING CATTLE BRANDS
IN YOUNG COUNTY, TEXAS FROM 1874 - 1890

Extracted from the original Brand Record Book II, Young County Court House, Graham, Texas. (Book I, 1856 - 1865 is missing. However, it listed only a few names.)

The original recording of names in the registration book gives some indication of the years of residence in this area. This list has been alphabetized for the convenience of researchers. There is some difficulty in determining the total area of residence; Young, Palo Pinto, Throckmorton, Baylor, Knox, Haskell, Shackelford, Stephens, Parker, Wise, and other counties in this area. It is of the utmost importance, however, because many names herein recorded do not appear on census, deed, voting, court, or other records available for historical and genealogical research.

There was no explanation why the names of some cattlemen were listed twice - except it is known that many of them registered a separate cattle and horse brand. In some cases these duplicate brands were the same and are so indicated.

The (*) at the end of a name means that the person was one of the first one thousand registrants of the association. The first person to register a cattle brand with this association was J. G. Tackitt, the second person was Mrs. N. Tackitt.

QUERIES IN GENEALOGICAL PUBLICATIONS

By Edna Perry Deckler
President - Texas State Genealogical Society

As an editor of genealogical publications for the past nine or more years, I would like to say a few things about queries.

All publications are limited as to space in each issue and the editors must decide what material fills each inch of the publication. If you want to be sure a query is published in a particular issue, buy an inch of advertising space.

If you want to take advantage of free query space in a magazine or bulletin, be sure that your query is either printed in lettering that can be read or else type it.

Most editors do not want to give the free query space to the same people every issue and try to keep a close check on this. But, if you'll check the back issues of several quarterlies or bulletins, you will see that often the same person has queries published in many issues. The reason for this is that this person has sent in query material that can be read and read ACCURATELY by the editor.

The value of queries is unquestioned. More people should take advantage of their use. Most genealogical editors do not receive enough queries--that is, enough that can be correctly read. As an editor, I have never had this problem as I try to remember in every letter I write to ask that a printed or typed query be sent in and "perhaps some of our readers can help you."

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY

PRISON FOR CONFEDERATE OFFICERS

"Depot Prisoners of War" Johnson's Island in Sandusky Bay,

"Sandusky Register", Sandusky, Ohio. In June 1945, the "Register-Star-News", Sandusky, Ohio reprinted the Descriptive Booklet of Johnson's Island and Confederate Cemetery, which was distributed by the Sandusky Chamber of Commerce. Copies of this booklet are now scarce. Permission has been granted for a reprint of portions of the booklet pertinent to genealogical research to The Quarterly.

Capt. H. C. Strong of Sandusky, President of the 128th Regimental Association, (twenty-fifth annual reunion, Aug. 16, 1900) has given much time and labor to the movement to place the cemetery on Johnson's Island under national ownership and care, and a bill to that effect will be introduced this winter by Hon. J. A. Norton, member of Congress from this district. An option on a sufficient area of land in which the cemetery is located has been secured at a reasonable price per acre, and there is every reason to believe that the bill will pass. The following articles giving a historical sketch of the prison on Johnson's Island, and the improvement of the cemetery in the spring of 1890, will be of interest and pertinent at this time:

Late in the fall of 1861, Lieut. Col. Wm. Hoffman, commissary general of prisoners, came to Sandusky and leased, from Mr. L. B. Johnson about 40 acres of land on Johnson's Island to be used for a prison for Confederate officers. The post was known officially as "Depot Prisoners of War, Johnson's Island," near Sandusky, Ohio. The Island is in Sandusky Bay, a little over three miles from the city.

Mr. W. T. West of Sandusky was given the contract for the construction of the necessary buildings and completed his contract early in 1862. The buildings consisted of cottages for officers, two-story barracks for troops and prisoners, the necessary buildings for quarter master and commissary stores and a hospital. The barracks for troops would accommodate two companies of one hundred men each. Bunks three tiers high, wide enough for two men, supplied with ticks filled with straw, afforded sleeping accommodations. They were warmed by cast iron box stoves, using wood as fuel, and were lighted with tallow candles. There was a kitchen at each end of each barrack. The barracks for prisoners were built in exactly the same manner and would accommodate about two hundred and forty men each.

The prison yard was surrounded by a fence built of two-inch plank, placed on end, about fourteen feet high. On the side next the bay, the planks were placed about four inches apart. A walk, built around the prison, near the top of the fence on the outside, was used by the guards giving them a view of everything that transpired in the prison yard.

At the northeast corner of the prison yard and also at the main entrance, fronting the street in the prison yard, block houses were built, loop holed for musketry, each armed with a brass, twelve-pound mountain Howitzer.

In November, 1861, William S. Pierson of Sandusky, was appointed major and authorized to recruit two companies of infantry to provide a guard detachment for the prison.

This prison depot was intended to be used exclusively for commissioned officers and, with the exception of a few small lots of enlisted men, sent by mistake and soon ordered to other prison depots, was so used. From first to last, about ten thousand Confederate officers were confined there; the greatest number being about three thousand. The entire number of deaths among these prisoners was about two hundred and twenty. There are now two hundred and six graves in the cemetery.

The prisoners began to arrive as soon as the prison was completed and more guards became necessary. Company C, Capt. Philitus W. Norris, was mustered into service June 6, 1862. At later dates additional guards were transferred to service at the prison.

In the summer of 1863, in consequence of a threatened raid upon the post from Confederates in Canada, three regiments of Ohio militia were ordered out. One encamped on Huron Park, in the city, and two on the island. Brigadier General Jacob D. Cox, commander of the district of Ohio, came to the island and remained until the militia were ordered home.

The United States steamer Michigan was in the bay a considerable part of the seasons of 1863-4.

Mr. L. B. Johnson has been dead about three years. The cemetery is now owned by Jas. H. Emrick and Charles Dick of Sandusky.

THE CONFEDERATE DEAD AT JOHNSON'S ISLAND

(From Sandusky Register, October 12, 1889)

When the distinguished party of Georgia farmers, fruit growers and newspaper men visited Sandusky in early September on their tour of sight-seeing through Ohio, they were taken by John T. Mack of the Register to the cemetery on Johnson's Island, where sleep 206 soldiers, nearly all of them officers, of the Confederate army who died while prisoners on the island. The visitors found the cemetery in a neglected condition, and the plain head boards that once marked the graves fast being obliterated by the frosts and storms of time. Many of the boards which marked the graves and once bore plainly the inscriptions of the dead lying beneath, are now entirely rotted away, many others give but in dim and imperfect outline the names they bore, many have fallen on the graves, few are now standing. The cemetery covers about one acre of ground. Its location is beautiful and its surroundings have all the charm that nature could give. It is at the west edge of a lovely grove of young trees at the northeast point of the island. To the westward lies a large open meadow with fields of corn beyond, and the old prison grounds and the few remaining buildings in full view on the elevated lands beyond. Save the tread of an occasional visitor, from day to day no sound from the busy world is heard and the soldier dead sleep the "sleep that knows no waking" in eternal silence. Once a year, on Memorial day morning, a steamer from the city conveys committees from the Grand Army Posts and the Relief Corps with other delegations of ladies and gentlemen across the bay to the island. The cemetery is visited, the graves strewn with flowers, the sacred word read and a prayer and an appropriate address delivered. Three or four years ago a government official erected an iron fence around the cemetery using up a small unexpended balance but beyond that nothing has been done by way of improvement. Three or four of the bodies have since the war been removed by relatives to a final resting place in the South. Two or three graves have head stones in marble erected by kindred who have not forgotten their dead.Some years ago The Register agitated the subject of the government improving the cemetery on Johnson's Island and through the personal efforts largely of its editor, I. F. Mack, Congress passed a bill appropriating a sum for the work, but the owner of the island refused to give a deed of the land to the government, therefore nothing could be done and the appropriation lapsed into the treasury at the close of the fiscal year. When the Georgia party visited the cemetery a few weeks ago the newspaper men resolved that they would bring the matter of improving it to the attention of their people. They saw how rapidly all marks showing the location of the graves and names of the dead were being obliterated and realized the necessity of speedy action. In compliance with the request then made by the Georgia brethren, The Register gives this morning a list of the dead buried in the cemetery. It has been obtained after careful labor, and, imperfect as it is, is the most correct obtainable. The original list was of course made by the officers in charge during the occupancy of the island for a prison, but it appears that those first records do not give the names of all the dead and the list contains the usual proportion of "unknown". A personal inspection of the graves and the inscriptions of the headboards, made some years after, while the headboards were in good condition and the inscription legible, confirmed the original list. That list was also compared with a "List of Prisoners of War who have Died at Johnson's Island", furnished by the commissary general of prisoners and on file, no doubt at Columbus, and in the war department at Washington. The list we give combines the two, showing wherein there are any variations in the two records, as explained in note A - following the list we publish.

There are in existence but two copies of this list - one held by Mr. L. B. Johnson of Sandusky, owner of Johnson's Island, and the other by the publishers of The Register. From that list and the accompanying plat of the cemetery which was made at the time the list was taken, the graves can be definitely located and a majority of the names of the individual dead they contain correctly ascertained.

In this connection a few words about Johnson's Island will be of interest. The island lies in Sandusky bay directly opposite the city and distance a little over three miles. A half-mile from its north and east shores lies the mainland of Ottawa county of which Johnson's Island is a part, which forms a peninsula nearly 15 miles long with Sandusky bay bounding it on the south and Lake Erie on the north and east.

The island is about one mile long, one-half mile wide and its east point is a little over one mile from the mouth of Sandusky bay. Its shores do not rise in rough and rocky outline from the water, but by gentle, gradually ascending grade to the center of the island on every side. The island contains about 300 acres, seventy-five of which are covered by magnificent young groves of black walnut, hickory and other trees native to this section, grown up almost wholly since the dark and unhappy days of the Civil War. About fifty acres are in orchards of peaches, grapes and other fruits; 150 acres in meadow and tilled lands for farming and a quarry of inexhaustible lime stone furnishes a large annual output of lime and building stones.

(From the Sandusky Daily Register)

May 12, 1890

The 206 Confederate soldiers who comprise the little silent city of the dead on Johnson's Island no longer sleep in unmarked graves. The marble headstones furnished by people of Georgia through subscriptions raised by the party of newspaper brethren and prominent farmers and fruit growers of the state following their visit here last September, are in place. At the head of every grave and in perfect line stands a well set marble slab rising two feet or more above and bearing in clear cut letters that a century's storms cannot obliterate, the only human epitaph there is of the soldier who lies beneath. The headstones are of pure white Georgia marble from the quarries of the American Marble Company of Marietta, and were transported through in one car from Marietta to Chattanooga by the N.C. & St. L. railway, thence to Springfield, Ohio, by the C., C., C. & I railway, and from Springfield to Sandusky by the Cincinnati, Sandusky and Cleveland railroad. All of these railroads conveyed the car free of charge, thereby by their liberality saving to the subscribers a considerable item in the expense. The headstones came through early in April last, in good condition. Mr. John Homegardner, owner of the steamer Josephine, kindly furnishing it at a very small charge. The work of superintending the transfer and placement of the headstones was put in charge of the writer by Col. John O. Waddell,

The contract for doing the work was let to Mr. Christ Schlenk, the well known marble cutter of this city. Mr. Schlenk completed the work on the 24th of April, 1890, after which a final inspection was made. Valuable assistance in the way of teams and men to transport the headstones from the landing to the cemetery was also kindly furnished by Messrs. L. B. Johnson & Co., owners of the land. Two graves in the cemetery had already been marked with enduring headstones - that of "G. W. Gillespie, company D, 66th., N.C., died September 9, 1868, aged 26 years." and that of "W. T. Norwood, Lieutenant Sixth S.C., Inf., C.S.A., died January 11, 1864, aged 30 years." Beneath the latter's inscription are these words, "Animus Opibusque Parati". The thoughtful unforgetting friend or descendant who had provided the headstone for Lieutenant Norwood's grave had also placed four iron posts and enclosed the grave with an iron chain, but some ruthless hand has stolen the chain. Mr. Schlenk straightened up the two headstones already there, and reversing the headstones that had been sent by the Georgia people, inscribed the work "unknown" upon them and set them over two graves that had not been marked. Since the improvement was inaugurated the writer has received many letters of inquiry from people in the south relative to the work and the records of the dead buried in the cemetery. Reviving interest has been awoken by the Georgia brethren's noble charity.

HOW TO PLAN A FAMILY REUNION AND SET UP A FAMILY ORGANIZATION

by

Effie Norwood Jones

There was a time in the not too distant past when we or our families lived in villages or in rural areas. Although many families still live in these small communities, increasing numbers of people are moving to the cities where the trend is toward the scattering out of the family group. In small communities there were many opportunities for family get-togethers. Children attended the same school with their relatives. During the busy seasons on the farm, fathers or other kinfolk often exchanged work. Even in moving to a distant state the family stayed together. Several brothers and sisters, as well as the parents, loaded the large families into the ox-drawn covered wagons to move to a new section. All settled in the same community.

Today in our more complex society much of our population lives in crowded cities in small houses and smaller apartments. Related families no longer live in close-knit communities and close family association is no longer a custom of the people. As a result, our families are losing the former close family ties.

Our children, grandchildren, nephews and nieces are growing up almost strangers to their relatives and ignorant of their family histories. Cousins have often reached adulthood without knowing who their second cousins might be. Children grow up and never hear the traditions and stories of their ancestors. Many of us can remember hearing parents, grandparents, aged aunts and uncles tell these stories by firelight in winter and by moonlight on the front porch in summer. Many of our children have never heard the stories we loved so well because of a change in the family attitude toward association with each other.

One way to overcome the lack of strong family ties is having a well-planned family get-together at regular intervals. A reunion of this sort will do much to reacquaint members of the family and introduce new members who have come into your family by birth and by marriage.

One interested person in a family can set the ball rolling. It will require much work; but if you are interested enough, you will find it very rewarding. Remember a good preparation makes for much success.

If at all possible, begin your preparation at least one year before you plan to have your first meeting. Try to contact two persons in your family who might become interested enough to help with some of the work. If they live near you, talk it over; if not, write them.

Deciding on your group is the most essential thing to do. You might want to start with descendants of either the paternal grandparents or of your maternal grandparents. Then select a date. Let that date commemorate something in your family—the birthdate of the grandparent, a wedding anniversary, or the date that the family settled in a certain location. It is especially important to begin the very first meeting tied to some special date. Then your date will never be a changing affair subject to the whims of your family and their friends.

When the group is selected and the date definitely set, make up a mailing list of persons in the group of descendants of the ancestor you selected to honor. Send postcards to heads of each of the families outlining briefly your plans and giving the date, place of meeting, and the ancestor to be honored with this affair. Attach a self-addressed card to be returned to you stating whether they will be there and if they will cooperate. But do not be too discouraged if you get very few returned cards. People accept new ideas slowly and have to be thoroughly sold before they begin to respond. Plan to send the same group at least three more notices before the date of meeting. Every time a person receives a contact about the reunion it will help create interest in the coming event.

The place selected for the meeting is of great importance. If at all possible, it is good to meet at a location at or near where the ancestor once lived. A member of the family may have a large home in that vicinity. If the family home is still in possession of someone in the family, perhaps they would volunteer their home as headquarters. Failing in that, try a park with a pavillion, a community center, or cabins at a lake which has an auditorium which could be secured for meetings. Check to see if these places charge a small fee at the time reservation is made.

A registration desk should be under direction of a capable person. Secure cards to be pinned on each person attending. This is especially helpful if many person in your group are not known to each other. Keep a guest book and be sure each person signs with address and telephone number.

A must at this first meeting is a business session with a temporary chairman in charge until permanent officers are elected. At this meeting, nominations should come from the floor naming a President, Vice-President, and Secretary-Treasurer. Sometimes, it is most successful to elect a Secretary and then elect the Treasurer as a permanent officer. At this meeting the President should be given power to appoint a Constitution Committee, a Food Committee and any other officers necessary for smooth running of the organization until the Constitution Committee has had an opportunity to formulate a Constitution and By-laws.

No organization can operate without money. The first meeting is an ideal time to take a free will offering. Out of this money should come repayment of postage and incidental expenses to the temporary workers. The Constitution Committee will write into the Constitution how further expenses will be obtained. The group may want to assess regular dues at so much per family, or they may prefer to have an offering at the business meeting each year.

Every family organization should have a purpose other than the obvious one of gathering together for conversation. Some suggestions as to what this purpose could be follow. If there is a Confederate soldier in your family who does not have a marker with his service record, one of the very first projects could be the securing from the United States Government of a marker or plaque suitably engraved to be placed at the soldiers grave. (The Government bears the cost.) Then, plan a program to dedicate this marker at the next meeting if the cemetery is near your meeting place. This will be a splendid opportunity to give the young people a chance to participate.

Probably the most important purpose for a family organization is compiling family records. Family sheets may be secured from any of the genealogical supply houses. Give these to each family. When they have completed their sheets, some interested person should be asked to take the sheets and compile a family record from these. By that time, if nothing has been done on tracing your ancestors, someone will probably be interested enough to launch into the most fascinating and rewarding of hobbies.

Plans may have to be set up to interview the oldest members of your family who may be too aged to attend the meetings. Even if they are too far away to visit, do not fail to write and secure any family material they may have or know about. They may have an old family Bible or may know where some ancestor in the family is buried. Copies of old letters and diaries in the family should be secured to be read at following meetings.

Search out records of your ancestors who served in various wars, even if they are buried too far away for the group to go to the cemetery. Possibly, you do not know where they are buried. Search for their service records, determine if the man secured a pension. Those records can be secured by writing Military Records, National Archives in Washington, D. C. or from the state in which the man lived when he served. Your nearest Public Library will be happy to aid you. Your high school seniors might like to take that as a history project. Work their findings into a program to be given at a meeting. Using music of that period being researched helps to make the program more impressive as do costume copies of the period. Someone in the family may like to write a pageant touching highpoints in lives of some of the ancestors.

A family sing-song also lends itself well to such a gathering. If you are meeting in a home, roll the piano to a window or out on a porch. Seat the group in chairs on the lawn. (Folding chairs can usually be borrowed from a church or from a friendly undertaker.)

Have a white elephant exchange. Have a Christmas tree in whatever month you are meeting. Advise everyone to bring a wrapped, inexpensive gift marked for a man, woman, boy or girl. One or more person should take charge of distributing the gifts. This gives all a taste of what the Christmas Season would be like if all could be together at Christmas.

Another idea is making grab boxes. One group could save all the advertising items that they get during the year - key rings, cosmetics, etc. Then persons in another group could make pot holders and other items. Each year, a month before the reunion, send these things to one person who is in charge of separating, wrapping, and placing them in boxes labeled men, women, boys and girls. At the time the families register all are given a draw from these grab boxes. This creates lots of fun at little or no cost.

A museum showing is another interesting affair. Everyone who has family antiques or family relics brings them for display. The family Bibles, old letters and pictures, wills, and deeds. These things are rare and usually fragile, and should be displayed only under glass or in cellophane folders. Display wedding garments worn by an ancestor or early tools used. There are many things that will be of special interest because they belonged to your ancestors.

Be sure to provide plenty of games and puzzles both for the adults and the children. The youngsters will love some outdoor sports. If there are enough people, play baseball or pitch horseshoes. Even marbles and jacks are enjoyed by small fry.

Every group will have to eat, regardless if your meeting is for one day or three. Possibly you will want to pay a certain sum for each family and have food handled by a caterer. If your people come from short distances, food can be handled by each family bringing their own picnic basket.

For succeeding years, you may want to have a food chairman who works out the menus and contacts the families asking them to bring certain things. Those coming from a distance could be advised to bring canned goods, etc. or send to the food chairmen money to purchase foods. Those living in the vicinity of the meeting place could prepare the vegetables, salads and dessert. Meat could be purchased from treasury funds. Baked hams, turkey, and large meat loaves are not too difficult to prepare and serve.

Use paper plates, napkins, and paper tablecloths. Provide large cartons to take care of the garbage. One member of a family association has become so interested in the foods prepared for her family meetings that she is compiling a "Family Cook Book."

There are many important do's and don'ts for reunions. Do get publicity in the newspapers, on T.V. and on radio in the vicinity before and after the meetings. Do have the secretary send at least two cards a year reminding your members and potential members of your affair. Do check early with hotels and motels in the nearby town advising them of your dates and giving them some idea of the number of persons who will need accommodations.

Do expand your group after the first meeting. If honoring your grandparents, remember they both had brothers and sisters. Invite their descendants to join you. Search out allied lines and ask them to meet with you. You will be surprised, in just a few years, at the number of relatives you have met from distant states. There will be many you never dreamed were a part of your family.

Do include the in-laws and make them feel a part of your family. Elect them to offices, put them on committees. Their participation will pay rich dividends.

Do plan an "Open House." This is especially good if some have lived in the community and moved away or if some have many relatives of other lines in the community. Saturday afternoon may be designated as "Open House for friends of the family."

Do put up signs marking the way to the place where the affair is held.

Don'ts for family reunions include: Don't ever skip a meeting, change the date agreed on, or allow controversial subjects, such as politics or religion to come up in the group.

If you follow these suggestions, your family reunion can be a rich and rewarding experience for everyone.

Between 1640 and 1660, during the Interregnum, about half of the alumni of Harvard College went to England for further study, to preach, teach, practice medicine, claim inheritances or comb the Herald's office for Armigerous Ancestors.

THUMBNAIL SKETCHES

A PANORAMA OF DALLAS SOCIAL LIFE II.

by

MARGARET ANN SCRUGGS (MRS. CARRUTH)

During the late Victorian period, and approximately until World War I, when the town was growing, reaching eagerly for the "one-hundred-thousand" goal, Dallas housewives of this pre- auto era patronized vendors who brought fresh vegetables and fruits in horse-drawn, light-weight wagons with flat tops to which were attached curtains of dark, opaque, fairly thin materials, easily rolled up and hooked to the top when not needed. These were on all four sides and quickly adjustable for protection against the weather. Dealers whose wagons lacked this feature carefully covered their wares with opaque material, especially in any weather-extreme, to preserve freshness.

The "Vegetable Man" was an institution -- a definite convenience -- for he dispensed with the need to deal directly with the grower, who did not deliver. However, one old couple, the Rothermels, well-known in the whole of Dallas, had a garden and a choice orchard in South Dallas -- down Holmes Street toward Metzger's Dairy, south of the fashionable area known as "The Cedars". The Rothermels were famous for the excellent quality of their products, which included fowls and eggs, and sometimes German baked-delicacies on order.

This was before the advent of super-markets or the "fresh vegetable" counters in the regular grocery stores dealing primarily with staples, such as the popular Jackson & Steere's and others, few in number, but excellent, which preceded the Hunt Grocery and others.

To a large degree meat markets were separate. The one on Harwood Street at the railroad along Marilla was famous for its superior Kansas City beef cuts. For any extra treat, or special event, as a dinner party or banquet, "Papa" personally supervised the butcher's compliance with his selection. Nothing cheap about meat there!

Another separate store sold "fresh-from-the-Gulf" oysters out of the barrels they were shipped in, bedded in chipped ice, in season, of course.

In the early days of "The Cedars" a favorite vendor was known as "Old Fine" because he would call out as he trudged along, "Fine, fine, super-fine --- One for a nickel, two for a dime", selling delicious home-made fried pies. Sometimes he had cookies or cup-cakes -- all products of his home kitchen. He and the "Ice-cream man" were the delight of children, especially.

In the summer, too, there was the "Watermelon man" with his melons piled high on his light horse- or mule-drawn wagon. He had cantaloups, too, although these were usually carried by the "Vegetable man", the watermelons being too apt to crush them. What a scramble the kids had that day the wagon wheel came off, dumped and split melons! What a feast!

One should not forget the "Old clothes man" who gathered from donors, preferably cotton or linen things, rags or tattered clothes which he sold by weight for his living, or sold, sometimes gave, to the Salvation Army after it became established here. Charity was thus effortlessly helped, and things were saved for this man's regular appearances.

In winter, especially on wet, cold nights, were two delicacies. Hot tamales came from the vendor at the corner of Commerce & Ervay across from the old City Hall-- a much respected old Mexican whose tamales were decidedly the "best-in-town". One bought a dozen, wrapped in newspapers, and piping hot, from his charcoal heated one tin-container inside the larger one where the coals were -- had to hurry home with them to eat them at their best!

On Ervay, nearby, and at other shops, an "Oyster Loaf" could be had on order. This was a loaf of bread hollowed out to form a covered "dish" for crisp-fried oysters, the frying oil penetrating the toasted outer bread, sometimes, in transit to the purchaser's home. Nothing was ever so good for ten-to-midnight "snacks". Maybe it was the oil used to fry them, or the quality of the oysters, or their relatively brief confinement within the loaf. Who knows?

Candy in those days featured, in addition to the fruit-flavored hard candies, gum-drops, horehound sticks for sore throats, all-day suckers on a stick, marshmallows (of course), long "shoestring" black licorice sticks, and taffy. Those who recall these sadly remark, "They don't have no more good candy these days".

Ribbon cane (sugar cane) was a greatly relished candy-substitute. It grew considerably taller than a man and as large or larger than a silver dollar in diameter -- juicy and tasty to munch and suck after peeling off the red, yellow and cream-colored exterior. As in the country, some city children knew how to bury unpeeled lengths of stalks with alternate layers of bark and straw, with an inch or two of soil covering the straw, in imitation of a squirrel's cache of nuts. Each child had his own stock-pile for future feasting.

Among the women, quilting parties carried over from Colonial days. Friends assembled and all worked at finishing handsewn covers of carefully applied patterns geometrically placed. Some of the patterns were very old, colorful and beautiful, especially when done with fine stitches and blended colors. Many had descriptive names which are still in use, such as "Williamsburg"; various roses, as "Chateau", "Rambling", and "Princess"; also, "Lone Star", "Broken Star", "Wedding-ring", "Majestic Poppy", and "Heart". Most of these seem to be having a revival today, together with crewel embroidery, vying with knitting, crochet, cross-stitch and other decorative, practical hand-crafts. Even long lace curtains are in vogue, though almost exclusively in period homes. Various "frames", still in use, are designed to assist the needle-worker, those for quilts being adaptable, also, to the stretching of carefully laundered curtains.

Sewing societies, cooking societies and classes are important in every era. During the "100 years of progress, 1860-1960" emphasis on different types of women's activities changed, quilting parties giving way to knitting bees, etc. Apparently these emphases run in cycles, yet a few folk continue types of work until they come into vogue again. Fine handwork tends to go into eclipse when fine laundering or skilled labor of any kind is scarce or especially expensive.

Perhaps one of the reasons for the restlessness in the world may be traced to the absence of hearth-fires in our homes, with the rocking chair, and with the foot-stools on which young members of the household may sit to learn the stitches at the feet of mother or grandmother. Hearth-fires have a wonderfully soothing effect on nerves -- watching the flames ever-changing. Tatting, lace-making, expert darning, china-painting, etching, watercolors, oils, block-printing on fabrics or paper, bookbinding and bookmaking, wood-carving, metal- and leather-working, jewelry designing-- all these interested early Dallas and had their experts, both men and women "master-craftsmen". Too, brick and stone-crafters, or masons, even blacksmiths had days, often years, of apprenticeship that developed a respect for skill. Today's mistaken interpretation of equal rights, which disregards individual workmanship by eliminating any form of graded recompense in proportion to quality of workmanship, all too often results in the lack of commensurate pride in the finished product.

Dallas' chief appreciation of iron-work was apparently for that in decorative fences and gates. More or less fancy hitching posts were also used. One classic was the small black boy holding out the hitching-ring; another, part of a tree trunk realistically portrayed. These are sometimes to be found in "junk-yards" or "antique" shops, but for the most part have disappeared as completely as the gaily painted wooden Indian that formerly stood in front of tobacco stores as their trade-mark. It's a shame he has gone under cover!

Until well into the 20th Century, landscaping, as such, was confined largely to the round bed of cannas or elephant ears in the front yard with the entrance walk bordered by violets or other low-growing plants. The "Back yard" was not yet dignified by the formally laid out "garden area" or the type of beautification resulting from the advent of Garden Clubs in the second half of the 20th Century. It was simply a playground or a utility area, sometimes boasting a kitchen- or vegetable-planting unit and maybe some pear, peach and fig trees. Where the depth of the lot permitted, behind the back yard was the fenced-in horse and cow lot with barns. In some of the earlier, more affluent homes, kitchens were separate from the houses, as in the Deep South, notably Virginia, with a breeze-way sometimes connecting them.

Another Virginia custom, also a relic of Colonial days, was the strictly-adhered-to preparation of all food (baking, roasting, and all) on Saturday for Sunday consumption. No work not definitely and admittedly necessary was done on Sunday. Attendance at Sunday School and Church, pleasure-rides into the country, visits to friends, were suitable activities, and where young daughters graced the household young men callers were expected.

The pace of life, one may readily see, was by no means quickened until after the middle of the first quarter of the 20th Century. One can scarcely estimate the rudeness of the shocks caused by the World Wars. Unbelievable! Almost overnight, it seemed, all that had constituted that rather tranquil, assured, stabilized day vanished in great turmoil. Every social custom was affected, overturned, too often ruthlessly swept into the discard, meritedly or not. Adjustment and re-adjustment have been the tenor of the day ever since; faster and faster, ruder and ruder the movement toward --- what? One wonders!

"Whenever a man rises to prominence in public life a general interest is manifested in his antecedents," says Milton Rubincam in his Adventures in Genealogy. James V. Allred found this to be true. From the time he was elected Attorney General of Texas in 1930 until his death in 1959 while he was serving as United States District Judge for the Southern District of Texas, he had received occasional letters from Allreds all over the United States. Most mentioned that their family originated in North Carolina. Mr. Allred stated, "I don't think any of us had ever thought much about our family background until the Texas Centennial in 1936. All of us had been too busy making a living and trying to get a start in life. I had heard of an organization known as the Sons of the Republic of Texas, but it had never occurred to me that we were eligible for membership in it until after I became Governor. I was proposed for honorary membership, and it was discovered that I was eligible."

This probably marked the beginning of an interest in the Allred Family ancestry which culminated in the publication of this study. As letters of inquiry continued to be received, Mr. Allred would answer them, then send the letter to his father, Renne Allred. It was Renne Allred who kept this accumulation of information and carried on the correspondence, for the busy official had little time to do so.

In August, 1956, Mr. and Mrs. James V. Allred had stopped in Randolph County, North Carolina, on the return trip from Williamsburg, Virginia. There they visited the graves of his great-great grand parents, William and Patience Julian Allred, and chatted with Allreds living in the area. Mr. Allred had promised to give his family an account of his findings, but it was not until July 4, 1957, that the actual setting down on paper of accumulated data was begun. It was done in the form of a memorandum addressed to the family, and followed at a later date by a second memorandum. Appendices were added containing letters and information germane to the account. For instance, in Appendix C there is an excerpt from a letter written by Mr. Renne Allred, Sr., telling what he knew of the Allred family. Like most people he could trace his family back only to his grandfather, but his is a graphic tale.

In 1920 Mr. Renne Allred, Sr., learned of a letter belonging to some of his kin, written by his great grandfather to one of his sons in Texas. He secured this and had photostats made, and a copy is included in the appendix. This letter was written July 14, 1843 to Elijah Allred, Republic of Texas, Harrison County, and was signed by William Allred and Patience Allred. In this letter he gives the family news and concludes with an old man's lonely and longing plaint to know all is well with his sons:

"I should be glad, heartily glad to see all my sons that has gone far to the West; But I very little expect ever to see any of them again during my stay in this World; my son Renne is gone far away from all his Connections and I have not had a scratch of a pen from him since he left Tennessee; nor no word or any account of him in any way; so I want you to Select the Best information you can and give me a schedule of his Standing in life; my son Laban has been the most mindful of any of you in writing Us, and We have neglected answering his last letter..."

Mr. Renne Allred, Sr., was a man of quiet dignity, integrity and quiet humor. Jimmie Allred spoke of his mother's strong will. Professor E. A. Hays declared that she was the smartest of the Allreds. Mr. Hays operated the Bowie Commercial College where all the Allred children graduated. Mr. Renne Allred, Jr. included this letter which shows she possessed a dry wit:

"Well, I got to see where all my uncles, aunts and cousins lived, recognized some of their homes, especially the one where the dog bit me and tore my dress when I was 7 years old, been scared of dogs ever since - but that road. West Texas breaks are good by the side of them, straight down hills, not room to stop at the bottom but straight up, about 2 miles of this, never was so scared in all my life ...I sat and lived over 65 years of my rugged life and can still see all those hills hitting me in the face...I know if I had to make that trip again and live 65 years in one day, I'd be crazy enough to make it in a plane and hope I'd never get there or back...

Why grandfather's house on one hill north, cemetery first hill south, great-grandfather's second hill south, and three hill only about a mile apart made it one holy sight for generations, but I've found that the world just goes on in spite of ancestors...

Let's forget it. Worse than bookkeeping, prefer living in the now."

This was her reaction to the trip she and her sister made to check on her family tree.

Jimmie Allred was a skilled raconteur as evidenced in tales he told of some of the experiences he had, such as this in North Carolina:

"We saw a sign, ALLRED GROCERY. I breezed in, like I used to do in the rural stores when I was campaigning, stuck out my hand to the proprietor and said, 'My name is Jimmie Allred. I'm from Texas. My great grandfather was born in this county and came to Texas in 1837. I'm trying to locate the old place, and, if possible, some of our folks.' Well, I quickly found that Texas breeziness didn't take; the fellow admitted his name was Allred, but acted that he thought I was going to ask him to cash a check. He said he didn't know much about the Allred family - and I didn't blame him."

This is a charming small book, made up of the intimate little stories that accrue in any family, lovingly and proudly told. It is written for the enjoyment and information of a specific family, and is about that family. This does not limit its appeal. It is not related in the smooth flowing sequence of events of a professional story teller because it was incomplete at the time of the death of James V. Allred. There is no evidence that he intended to make this into a book. He was telling his brothers, sisters, and his own sons what he had learned. It was completed by Mr. Renne Allred, Jr., who chose to keep the story as it was written, adding only information which came to light afterward.

This book was given to the Texas History and Genealogy Department of the Dallas Public Library by Mr. Renne Allred, Jr.

MARTIN B. LEWIS - LEDGERS

Compiled for publication by

Miss Mabel Wilkerson, Member,
Local History & Genealogical Society

Through the courtesy of Mr. J. W. Herring and Mr. Marvin R. Herring, copies of the Martin B. Lewis Ledgers have been made for deposit in the Texas, Local History & Genealogy Department, Dallas Public Library, and will be available for public use at a later date.

These ledgers are rather voluminous and therefore rather costly to reproduce in any form. Likewise, searching for specific items of interest to individuals is a time consuming chore and an imposition on these submitting the material and the compiler. The Editor suggests that researchers delay their inquiries until the copies are bound and made available for public use in the Dallas Public Library.
